What does the law have to say about politicians' unauthorized uses of songs and musicians' objections to them?

When are copyright, trademark, advertising and right of publicity law implicated in these disputes?

Join Northeastern Law's Center for Law, Information and Creativity (CLIC) and musician, lawyer and law professor Kevin Casini to explore these questions and more. Professor Casini is a member of the Recording Academy (known for their Grammy awards), the Music Business Association, the Copyright Alliance and the Americana Music Association. He teaches copyright, entertainment and arts law at Quinnipiac University School of Law. Professor Alexandra Roberts, faculty director of CLIC, will moderate the event.
